

Aiming to support the “whole child,” many public schools are complementing their academic focus with physical and mental health services, as well as family support programs. These efforts are particularly important in low-income neighborhoods where children may experience social and physical challenges to their wellbeing. West Contra Costa Unified School District (WCCUSD) has committed to

