students to engage in deep and meaningful work through authentic experiences, then our professional learning must be that too.

Moreover, we want to truly bridge research and practice, learning deeply from a broad and inclusive body of knowledge. Education is more than merely developing discrete skills; it's nuanced and complex and to do it well requires us to be continuously learning and growing as professionals with understanding of the Sciences of Learning and Development which include disciplines such as neuroscience, linguistics, child and adolescent development, etc.
